Gamat: The Treasure of Malaysia

For hundreds of years, the Malays have been using gamat, as a multipurpose remedy and health food to prevent illness and maintain good health and fitness. Legend has it that Princess Mahsuri of Langkawi Island purportedly used gamat for preserving both external and inner health. The nutrition and therapeutic value of gamat is also recorded in The Dictionary of Traditional Chinese Medicine, which states "Sea cucumber is Ginseng of the Sea. It is mild and tonic; its nutrition value rivals that of ginseng".

Scientific Research & Development

Studies in US, Australia, Japan and Korea show that gamat offers therapeutic effects. It is believed to have the ability to lower high blood pressure, relieve asthma, rheumatoid arthritis and diabetes. It also has the ability to heal wounds fast and effectively

A study in London suggests that "Sea Cucumber' a new malaria weapon".

Local experts have also conducted research on this miracle creature - gamat. Among others, institutions of higher learning have been actively conducting studies on gamat:

National University of Malaysia (UKM)

Studies by UKM show that, gamat (Stichopus hermanii) helps improve conditions such as:

1. Uterine contraction
2. Cardiovascular health
3. Normalize blood pressure
4. Wound healing
5. Anti-bacteria
